How to Butcher at Home

The Farmer Who Has No Place for Artificial Cooling of Meat Must Depend on the Weather

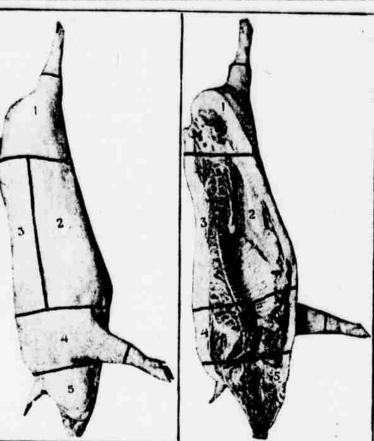

By P. F. Trowbridge, Professor of Agricultural Chemistry, University of Misson

With the scarcity of corn the tendency is to do home butchering a little earlier than usual this year. Judging from reports received of spoiled meat, many farmers have not waited long enough for cooler weather. The farmer has no place for artificial cooling of meat and must depend upon natural temperature. Meat must be chilled rapidly (lose its animal heat) or fermentation will set in and the meat will sour. Meat will not chill out well in damp weather. Do the slaughtering on a cool clear day. Teming at night.

Forty pounds clean fine sait, 10 pounds granulated sugar (or light brown sugar), four pounds black pepper, three pounds saltpeter, one-half pound cayenne pepper.

Mix these ingredients thoroughly and rub thoroughly the well-cooled pieces of meat, using about half the mixture. Place the meat on a table, box or bench in a cool place, but do not pack tightly in a box or barrel. Let the meat lie for 10 days to two weeks; then rub on the remainder of the mixture. Nesting Boxes and Roosts Are Arranged Together.

Secret Places Afforded the Hens and Perches Are in Position to Allow Necessary Fresh Air to Circulate Without Drafts.

I think I have studied out and made a perfect combined nesting and roosting box, says a writer in the Farm and Fireside. The nesting boxes are of easy access and at the same time so secret as to please the hens and make them very secure from the hens learning that pernicious habit, so often learned in the winter, of eating their eggs.

The roosts are in a position to allow all possible fresh air without draft, and at the same time allow protection from a severely cold night. The third important advantage lies in the fact that it is made so much in section as to be moved with ease. Every part is perfectly accessible, so as to be easily oiled or whitewashed, to prevent and remove disease or lice.

The foundation is a bench. A, 15 inches high, which allows the hens to use the floor space beneath, so that is not wasted: 25 inches wide and as long as desired, conforming to the space available and fowls use it. Remember the nests E should be 15 inches square, so the length should be an equal multiple of 15. The nest boxes should have a door, B, to turn down, in front, with sufficient open space in cracks to allow the hen a little light and yet dark enough to encourage them in hiding their eggs and also to discourage the idle hens from hunting after the newly laid the nests E and opens into each. On top of the nest is a cleated cover of matched boards that carries an openfaced box without top or bottom, that sets on the cleated cover and in turn supports a cleated cover. In this box is placed a roost of two poles nailed to 1 by 3-inch strips, 24 inches long, for supports. At the front edge of cover is fastened a piece of burlap or strip of blanket to turn down on very cold nights after the hens are at roost Large fowls need a cleated board set the entrance of the nest boxes.

PROPER HEIGHT FOR ROOSTS 'Elegy in a Country Churchyard' than

There Are Many Disadvantages in High Roosts-Eighteen Inches Is Considered High Enough.

The perches for fowls should be low. Eighteen inches above the floor is high enough. There are many disadvantages in high roosts. First, fowls of heavy breeds are almost certain to injure their feet when they fly down from a high perch to a hard floor; this is the way most cases of bumblefoot are caused.

All perches should preferably be built so that they will not touch the along. walls at any point. When they do so it is much easier for lice and mites thrive. The fewer creeses or cracks, wherein lice may find a lodging place, about the perches the better, and if they do ont come in contact with the walls of the building at any point the insect pests will have very little opportunity to hide. Then, if the roost poles are thoroughly drenched with coal oil or some other liquid lice killer frequently, all vermin about the perches may be kept in Pure Bred Poultry.

Despite the constant preaching of experts, it is safe to say that most of the chickens of the country are just chickens-nameless. It would be impossible to classify them as breeds. There are some farmers who claim that crossbred or "nobred" hens lay better, and consequently pay better than thoroughbreds. The farmer who keeps pure-bred stock can also sell a uniform product when he disposes of surplus stock, old hens, brollers, roasters, etc. A mixed crop of chickens presents an appearance of inferior quality, and will never take the highest quotation.

Another advantage of keeping pure stock is that one can sell eggs for hatching-at a time when market eggs sell for the lowest prices-at a very reasonable figure.

Fertile Turkey Eggs.

It is a noted fact that if the robbler is present during the time of laying the first clutch of eggs, the secand clutch will be fertile without his presence.
